Market Update

The Medical Office sector is poised for a strong return as patient care adapts and healthcare needs continue to increase. The sector is being tested as many are facing the challenges created by COVID-19. The medical office was once perceived to be a more resilient sector during a downturn, but the uphill battle faced by healthcare providers due to the pandemic has slowed revenue. Restrictions on surgeries and the delays of non-emergency visits to doctors’ offices have weighed on operations, contributing to job losses and furloughs. Despite the short-term costs, the healthcare industry should be one of the quickest to bounce back from the pandemic as the population’s need for medical care increases. Medical services are returning as states navigate through reopening phases, and pent-up demand from postponed procedures and office visits provide a positive outlook.

Unemployment rates are just above 8% as the work-from-home option continues for many businesses. State regulations and company policies are two major deciding factors as to when workers will be allowed to return to their workplaces. Currently, the U.S. equity markets are reaching all-time highs, the Federal Reserve is providing great support and the therapeutic and vaccine research/development are in good spirits. High frequency economic indicators suggest continued improvement into 2021.

COVID has forced many employers to place restrictions on workplace access, and while most office tenants have not been able to return to their workspace, an increasing number of tenants are continuing to pay rent. There are some states allowing workers to return to the office, but tenants have not been in a hurry to return. Major markets across the country are reporting about 10%-15% occupancy of office space and although the occupancy numbers remain very low, landlords are not missing out on rental income. The share of rent received from went from 93% in the beginning of the year, to almost 97% in June and July. After the 10 million square feet of negative absorption in the second quarter, the third quarter is on track to add 24 million square feet of losses. The long-term impact of the pandemic on the office sector remains unclear.
